Please, if you no not understand that hand-crafted big game African rifles routinely sell up to $200,000 each, then pass this extraordinary example. This offer is for very select group of collectors. The weapon is one of only 12 custom made and sold in the US. Six of those 12 are in private collections, two are on YouTube.

Why this weapon was created. According to its designer, the T-Rex was created in answer to the specific request of a certain African Big Game Guide. Amazing background story:

Many thanks to a knowledgeable GB member for providing the following description of the rare wood from which A-Square crafted the stock for this weapon. As the photographs suggest, the wood is both bright and deep in color, very dense and in perfect condition, a wonder to behold.

"The species of wood in the stock is Claro walnut, where the slow-growth specimens feature the 'tiger stripe' figure and chatoyance that is called 'fiddleback' when describing walnut. There are often varying amounts of burl and fiddleback in Claro walnut. Claro is very uniquely a North American species that grows in Northern California through the Pacific Northwest. Weatherby Inc. popularized Claro walnut for their rifle stocks in the 1950s."

Giuaranteed to arrive is perfect working condition. This in only one of twelve (12) made for the US market by its skilled designer, Arthur Alphin, at his now-defunct company, A-Square. This particular rifle stands out from its brothers by its spectacular, custom walnut stock. Recoil is total maximum among all USA hunting rifles. Think the .460 Weatherby is bad at 100 foot pounds? T-Rex will shock you with TWICE THE RECOIL.

Built by A-Square on a Remington P-14 action and chambered for the massive .577 Tyrannosaur. Matte blued barrel with brass beaded blade front sight, fixed white-line A-Square rear sight, and quick detach scope mounts. The rifle is marked "A-SQUARE/MADE IN U.S.A." and ".577 Tyrannosaur" on the barrel with the serial number on the right of the action and "HANNIBAL MODEL" on the left as well a Remington mark below the rear scope mount. The pistol grip stock is beautifully figured and features a 3/4 inch ventilated rubber recoil pad. The .577 Tyrannosaur is among the most powerful sporting cartridges ever developed, producing over 10,000 ft/lbs of muzzle energy, a truly staggering number, and can drop any game on the planet.

A-Square was established 1979. Lieutenant Colonel Arthur B. Alphin was the founder and chief designer for the A-Square Company. Besides the company location in Chamberlain, South Dakota, the company had a location in Bedford, Kentucky. By August 2008 Alphin planned to move his ammunition factory to Butte, Montana. A-Square manufactured rifles usually came with stainless steel barrels as a standard feature. The barrels on the rifles use epoxy resin to bed the barrel to the stocks. Magazine boxes were manufactured from plate steel for rigidity and were also welded to the receiver. A-Square rifles were engineered to allow the firing pin to retract further into the bolt body than other firearms (.400 in (10.2 mm)). This increases the force of the firing pin on the cartridge within the chamber.

The .577 Tyrannosaur or .577 T-Rex (14.9x76mm) is a very large and powerful rifle cartridge developed by A-Square in 1993 on request for a professional guide in Zimbabwe who escort clients hunting dangerous game. The cartridge is designed for use in "stopping rifles" intended to stop the charge of dangerous game. The 577 contains a .585-inch (14.9 mm) diameter 750-grain (49 g) monolithic solid projectile which when fired moves at 2,460 ft/s (750 m/s) producing 10,180 foot-pounds force (13,800 J) of muzzle energy. The production model from A-square is based on their Hannibal rifle.

Not to be missed are the several reviews of the .577 T-Rex by my favorite YouTuber KENTUCKY BALLISTICS. Together these have gathered millions of views:
